Program Overview & Target Audience

Glomerular disease is associated with morbidity and mortality in patients of all ages, and is a common cause of end stage kidney disease. Included are those who commonly present with nephrotic syndrome (minimal change disease, FSGS and membranous nephropathy), the nephritic syndrome (vasculitis, lupus nephritis and IgA nephropathy), among other kidney diseases. Treatment often utilizes immunosuppressive regimens such as high doses of corticosteroids, alkylating agents, calcineurin inhibitors, biologics and antimetabolites, which are also associated with significant side effects and morbidity. Thus, glomerular diseases present a difficult and unique challenge to both patients and nephrologists and are associated with high treatment costs and historically, have had poor renal outcomes.

The program has been designed for nephrologists and will address the latest updates and significant challenges of glomerular disease. A combination of case presentations and lectures will be used to provide an academically sound and clinically relevant review.

Course Objectives:

At the conclusion of this activity, participants should be able to:

- Define clinical predictors of progression for IgA Nephropathy
- Review the role multi-target therapy has in lupus nephritis
- Explain the role of plasma exchange therapy in the treatment of ANCA associated vasculitis
- Describe the general clinical presentation of and diagnostic approach to membranous nephropathy
- Implement new strategies to diagnose and treat glomerular disease, as with the use of the serum anti PLA2R antibody and treatment with rituximab in patients with membranous nephropathy
